LIVE WIRE IN TROUGH.

Another Horse Was Burned as Stables Burn After Being Struck in Storm.

During the thunder storm early to-day lightning played havoc about the city. The electrical display was vivid and in some instances had disastrous results. The heaviest part of the rain came at a time when thousands of persons were on their way to work, and came so suddenly that they were caught in it.

The rain followed several days of oppressive heat, which caused much suffering.

John Miller, driver of a delivery wagon for Peter Dosecher at Eighty-sixth and Bay Fourteenth streets, Brooklyn, had a thrilling experience with a bolt of lightning. A block from Dosecher's store there is a watering trough, and every morning Miller drives there after leaving on his regular rounds and waters his horse.

This morning, after the shower, he reined in at the trough and, crawling over onto the horse's back, removed the bridle. As he did so the horse dipped its nose into the water and with a snort raised on its haunches and fell over dead.

Miller was hurled to the street and had a case of iron being cranked beneath the horse as it fell.

An investigation was made and it was found that a wire of the Hudson Electric Company had been strung over the storm, and one of the live ends ran in such a way as to connect with the trough. Water being a good conductor, the horse received a powerful shock when it attempted to drink. A doctor attended Miller and he was able to go home.

The residents of the Parkville section of Brooklyn also had their excitement. Lightning struck a barn belonging to Adam Strimstein, at Bay Avenue and Chestnut street and in a few minutes it was burning brightly. There were several fine horses inside, but the family got all of them out except one. This one was burned to death.

The firemen who responded to an alarm could do nothing to prevent a spread of the flames to a barn and a carriage house belonging to William H. Heath, adjoining the Strimstein barn, and both were destroyed. The total loss from the blaze was about $2000.

THE BETRAYAL!

"The Betrayal," a stirring romance of love, adventure and mystery, by E. Phillips Oppenheim, will appear serially in The Evening World, beginning to-morrow. The first instalment will be issued as a special fiction supplement, handsomely illustrated in colors.

A hero in the humble garb of a laborer died in St. Vincent's Hospital to-day. Raffaello Lanno, aged twenty-nine, of No. 263 Third street, Jersey City, sacrificed himself to save his fellow workmen.

Lanno was a member of a crew of ten under Foreman Alfred Fritz who were working near Astor place station in the Subway. On account of the work-trains which daily pass over the express tracks at an early hour it was necessary to put out a flagman. Lanno was detailed to station himself about 200 feet from the workmen with a flag. One hundred and fifty feet south of him was a red light, which was supposed to warn work-trains on up and downtown express tracks before they reached Lanno. The flagman was an extra precaution taken to protect the lives of the men.

About 6:20 o'clock a work-train roared up on a north express track and passed the red light. Lanno perceived that unless he stopped the train the lives of his companions would be endangered. Jumping into the track he frantically waved his flag and remained until struck by the train. He was dragged along, his body hitting the iron supports at intervals and finally thrown aside. The train slowed down but did not stop for some distance. The workmen heard it approach, but, thinking that they were amply protected by the flag, did not realize their danger until the cars were almost upon them. They all managed to jump aside in time to escape. Had the train not slowed up all would have been struck.

Wondering why Lanno had not flagged the train, they went back to investigate and found him bruised and bleeding beside the track.

The bones of his legs were so badly crushed and broken that they protruded from the legs of his trousers. He was tenderly taken to the downtown platform at Astor Place and all the aid possible given until surgeons from St. Vincent's Hospital arrived. To conceal the spectacle from the eyes of hundreds of passengers, newspapers were spread over him. He did not lose consciousness, and modestly told how he came to be hit.

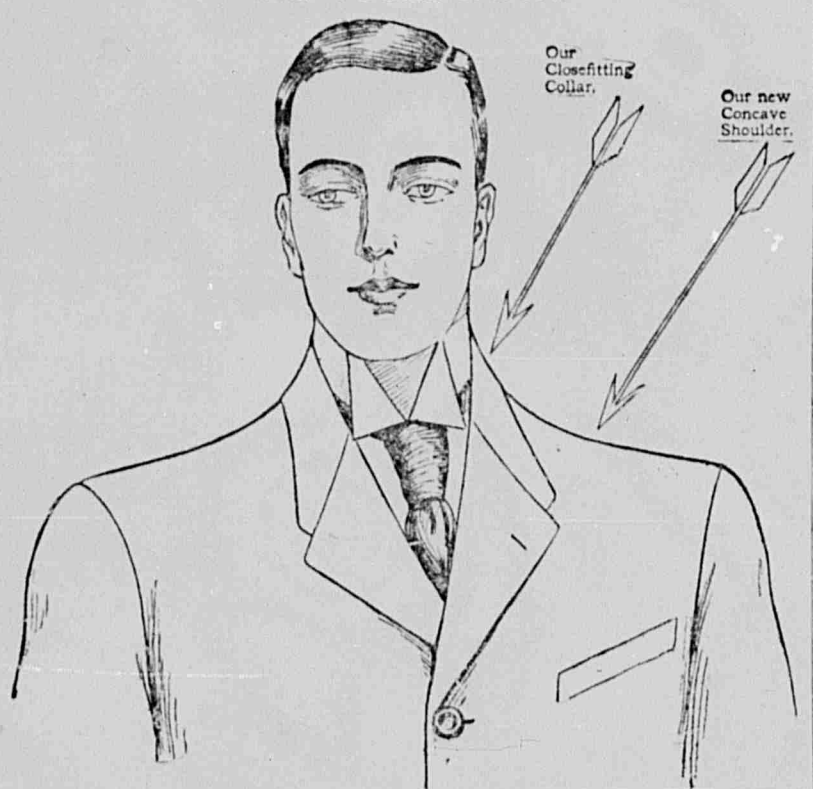

It is not known why the train did not stop, as the flag was plainly visible in the electric lights, and the red light was shining.

Lanno was a native of Ireland and has no relatives in this country.

DIES FROM A FALL.

John O'Connor, fifty years old, and a laborer on a fruit boat, died in the Hudson Street Hospital to-day from injuries received by falling down a flight of stairs at a lodging-house, No. 48 West Bowery. He was a native of Ireland and has no relatives in this country.

A Week-End Offering of Special Interest—Suits at $15

We will grant that the market for high class woollen fabrics is ruled by long prices, because we have had to pit our strength against it.

That we gained our point is evidenced by this new series of suits at Fifteen Dollars. Had it been otherwise these suits would never have come to being under Twenty Dollars.

You may go through every good shop in town and not one will afford a better suit at Twenty Dollars than these at Fifteen.

But we did not end by merely putting extraordinary good fabrics in these suits, they have been fashioned into single and double-breasted sack models, the coats of which are long, shaped at the back with deep side or centre vents.

Of gray velour cassimeres, blue serges, black thibets and fancy cheviots—$15.
